Gas Mark 2

Built by John Holdsworth in 2005 to a Wharram design the completed build was the subject of an article in the March 2015 edition of Practical Boat Owner magazine. The article goes into great detail with regard to how the build was completed. A copy of this is available for a serious enquirer.

The hulls are plywood, epoxied inside and out.

The builder decided to include a central pod which in addition to adding a further two single berths, thus bringing the total available to six, allows space for a navigation table and instruments in a sheltered environment. This makes for a much more habitable vessel suitable for sailing in Northern latitudes.

Seating is provided in the central pod. This provides two berths.

In each hull is a double berth. The port side hull has a small sink with tap and a worktop that takes a portable stove. The starboard side hull has the electrics panel.

The port side hull has a small sink. There is a spirit stove available.
